

Gold named Realtor of the Year

The Roundtable Gala, jointly sponsored by the Denver Board of Realtors, the Aurora Association of Realtors, and the Denver Metropolitan Commercial Association of Realtors, was held at the Hyatt DTC in March. Among the awards presented was the Salesperson of the Year, awarded to Eric J. Gold of Sheldon-Gold Realty, Inc.

The criteria for this award is based on community involvement, real estate production, and service to the trade association and industry.

Gold graduated from the University of Denver and is principal and owner of Sheldon-Gold Realty, Inc. which was founded in 1986 and specializes in representing landlords and tenants with office and retail leasing. A Denver resident since 1970, Gold is well versed in the metro Denver real estate market and has extensive experience analyzing commercial real estate.

As an active member of the Denver Metropolitan Commercial Association of Realtors, Gold has volunteered his time to promote their marketing sessions. His efforts have resulted in increased attendance, and improvement in the effectiveness of these sessions.

Beyond real estate, Gold volunteers as the engineer of the steam train at Tiny Town near Morrison, and serves as president of the Tiny Town Foundation, which donates its proceeds to youth-oriented charities.

He also volunteers between 30 and 40 hours per month as a reserve police officer for the Aurora Police Reserves. He is a 1986 police academy graduate and fully certified reserve police officer.

Gold and his wife, Robyn, head up the fundraiser for the Just Say No campaign, raising over $100,000 through a silent auction.

Eric J. Gold

Gold's successful career as a commercial broker is evident by his winning the Roundtable Award twice for most commercial sides closed during 1992 and 1994. He has been a participant of the Roundtable for the past seven years.

A portion of the net proceeds from this year's gala (with the theme Night of the Roundtable) will be used to provide support to charitable causes selected by each sponsoring organization.